

Ensuring the safety of American personnel and operations globally has never been more important—or more challenging.

Terrorism, cyber security, civil disturbances, natural disasters, and crime affect thousands of U.S. companies, educational institutions, faith-based organizations, and NGOs working abroad. Today, more than ever, U.S. organizations and workers rely on the Overseas Security Advisory Council (OSAC) for education and information.

OSAC's innovative collaboration between the U.S. government and the private sector has enabled U.S. companies and citizens to confront these challenges. As global risks have expanded during recent years, the International Security Foundation (ISF) was founded in 2011 by the private sector to support OSAC's mission and programs.

OSAC, through ISF funding, helps to keep U.S. organizations and citizens more secure by offering programs that address the ever-changing security needs of local OSAC constituents around the world.
